That night there was an awful storm. There was rain, thunder and lightning. There was a loud knock at the palace door. The king himself went to open it. And there standing before him, was a princess. But she didn't look at all like a princess for the rain had taken all the curl out of her long golden hair, and the wind torn her long dress.

“She says she is a real princess”, the old king told his wife. “We shall soon find it out”, said the queen. And without a word she went to the bedroom where she decided the princess would spend the night. She kept three small peas on the bed and placed twenty thick mattresses and twenty feather beds on the top of the three small peas. ‘Did you spend a comfortable night, my dear’ ? the queen asked the princess in the morning.

“I scarcely closed my eyes, there were rocks in my bed, my back is black and blue”, said the charming princess. The queen was delighted, for she knew that she had found a real princess for her son.
